CALLING ALL AUDITORS ABOUT HELP

From the beginning Ron has been able to help people. He has achieved Clears as a regular thing. It finally became apparent that for some reason others could not do this, so for years he has worked on methods to reduce the possible mistakes an auditor could make. Skill is needed, so training is geared to produce an auditor who can sit still, put his attention upon a pre-clear, end cycles of actions etc., etc. The Auditor's Code, the TRs and more and more foolproof rundowns are examples of Ron's achievements in this direction. From the viewpoint of Help - the necessity for the Auditor's Code is an eyeopener as to the case level of the average auditor. There is not one point therein which is not self-evident to all. Invalidation - evaluation? None but those who 'can't help' would ever flub in that direction. 'Don't get angry', 'don't discuss cases with others' 'flatten processes' 'never leave the pc in mid-session'. Training emphasises the ability to keep interest and attention on the pre-clear, to do nothing to disturb or startle him. All these points are so obvious; why has it been necessary to push them home with such strictness?

A lot we learn is technique that the highest toned thetan would have to know, such as finished cycles of action. This is technical know-how necessary to the successful application of such a precise science as this. The facts of the mind and its manifestations in session, mis-emotion to be expected, the fact that 'looking at' de-intensifies energy masses - these things are legitimate data. But a very large proportion of our training is spent on producing an auditor who can audit successfully in spite of his case. In other words Ron has had to take what he had in the form of material and make the best of it. By concentrating on strict training drills, the indoctrination of the Auditor's Code and the improvement which could be achieved in a student's own case during the training time, he has produced auditors who can get good results. But often not good enough. Observation of some auditing results over the past few weeks, has made it clear that the biggest obstacle to clearing is the auditor himself. If he is not up to being able to help, he will, albeit unconsciously, destroy. Little evaluations, invalidations: coming off the process before it is flattened; these are all things that happen with most of us. Exactly how destructive this sort of thing can be, has to be experienced to be understood. There is now a sure and fairly fast way to deal with this and that is - GET HELP RUN ON OURSELVES. This should be number one priority of every HGC's programme. Get your auditors flat on Help. The same thing applies to the field. Get yourselves audited, co-audit, stick to it and don't be content until you ARE clear. Keep auditing and don't have a case while you are auditing, but get cleared.

As I see it this is the only thing which stands between us and 100% success.
