TYPES OF CRAMMING

There is a need to define the different types of Cramming.

Existing dictionaries do not define Cramming adequately. Webster's New World Dictionary defines cramming as: "to fill beyond normal capacity, to prepare or review for an examination in a hurried intensive way, crush". The 13 volume Oxford Dictionary defines it as: "to prepare a person for an examination for a special purpose, in a comparatively short time, by storing his memory with information, not so much with a view to real learning as to the temporary object aimed at". These definitions are actually misleading.

There are two areas of Cramming:

1. Tech Cramming.
2. Admin Cramming.

There are two basic types of Cramming:

A. To rapidly prepare a person for post or technical action, through intensive study, Word Clearing and drilling on key materials.

B. To rapidly correct a person after the fact of an error or flub, by finding the Why, and handling that Why with study and Word Clearing of the particular data involved and drilling the actions to a point of confidence and competence. This covers Cramming Orders sent to Qual or originated by the Cramming Off or Qual Sec on Out Points in the Org.

In each case, the person is crammed on the exact materials to achieve the result.

The use of Cramming as a preparatory action is usually done in the area of technical, where the Cramming Officer ensures that Tech and Qual personnel and Internes have their necessary High Crime Okays to do technical actions. These are not necessarily limited to 4 or 5 issues but as contained in the Okay to Audit Checksheets.

Preparatory Cramming can be done in Admin Cramming but the rule on no more than four or five issues stands.
